

Eagle Award for Excellence in Community Relations

Criteria

The Eagle Award for Community Relations Excellence is based on community participation with the local community and educational initiatives by an individual quarry location. This award will focus on individual quarry locations and is not intended to represent the activities that are usually organized at the corporate level. All locations are encouraged to participate with their local community and the Eagle Award for Community Relations Excellence will recognize the location with the most effective program.

Company Participation with Local Community

Aggregate operations are important to a community's overall economic strength but rarely are the local citizens aware of this value. What steps are being used to reinforce that connection to the local community?

Employee Participation with Local Community

The image of truck traffic, surface mining and all other aspects of construction aggregate production may never be very popular. What activities by individuals in your organization are demonstrating the company's concern for the community's values and concerns?

Activities that Reinforce the Overall Commitment to the Local Community

Identify any individual program that you have developed that connects your facility to the local community. What specific activities have been developed to reinforce your connection to the local community?
